TONE

Of the characteristics defining the quality of a pianoforte Tone is, first and foremost, the most vital—in the production of this integral feature lies the whole science and art of modern pianoforte construction. No matter how perfect the instrument in other respects, it is by the Tone, above all else, that the musical connoisseur estimates and judges the worth of a piano.

The highest skill and craftsmanship, dealing throughout with scrupulously chosen material, is the secret of the Brinsmead Tone—and it is to be found in every piano sent out from the factory. No matter what the price, whether Upright or Grand, "John Brinsmead & Sons, Ltd., London," on any piano, is a guarantee of a reliable, durable Tone unsurpassed in quality—together with those excellences which have placed the "Brinsmead" foremost in the rank of British pianos.

Write to Dept. 37 for the New Brinsmead Catalogue containing full particulars of the firm's latest models. It will be sent, post free, together with the name and address of the local agent.

Hills was on picket duty, with two guns, at the mouth to the right of the camp. About 11 o'clock a.m. there was a rumour that the enemy's cavalry were coming down on his post. Lieutenant Hills proceeded to take up the position assigned in case of alarm, but, before he reached the spot, he saw the enemy close upon his guns before they had time to form up. To enable him to do this, he boldly charged, single-handed, the head of the enemy's column, cut down the first man, struck the second, and was then ridden down, horse and all. On getting up and searching for his sword, three more men came at him (two mounted); the first man he wounded with his pistol; he caught the lance of the second in his left hand, and wounded him with his sword; the first man then came on again, and was cut down; the third man (on foot) then came up, and wrenched the sword from Lieutenant Hills, who fell in the struggle, and the enemy was about to cut him down when Major Tombs, who had gone up to visit his two guns, saw what was going on, rushed in and shot the man and saved Lieutenant Hills. By this time the enemy's cavalry had passed by, and Major Tombs and Lieutenant Hills went to look after the wounded men, when one of the enemy passed with Lieutenant Hills' pistol; he first cut at Lieutenant Hills who parried the blow, and then turned on Major Tombs, who received the blow in the same manner. His second attack on the Lieutenant was more successful, as he was cut down with a bad sword-cut on the head, and would have been, no doubt, killed, had not Major Tombs rushed in and put his sword through the man.—Extract from Despatch of Lt.-Colonel M.
